

About Webstuff

Contributed by Alan
Tuesday, 08 July 2008
Last Updated Tuesday, 08 July 2008

My background is in Liberal arts, construction, poker and farming, so building web pages is a natural fit. I've had my own web site(s) since 2006, I've made several sites for friends and family, and now I'm doing so for strangers.

I am entirely self taught when it comes to websites. I read constantly about web technologies and spend entirely too much time learning and learning about different programs and programming languages pertaining web pages.

I do this work because I like it. My excellent problem solving abilities allow me to jump into most any project, and I have a very good sense for when I might be over my head.